Four-year-old Autumn Barraclough runs with her father, Brett, just yards from the finish line during the 21st annual Rusty Family Triathlon. The Barraclough's team "Brett's Angels," swam 500 yards, biked 10 miles and ran 2 miles joining 34 other teams and 27 individuals on Monday afternoon.

Alcohol on island — Team studies alcohol use

By Jim Bennett

A team of USAKA and KRS officials are examining the impacts of alcohol on Kwajalein in an effort to balance the availability and consumption of alcohol with the effects on people, the community and the command.

"It's a tough issue," said Kent Duncan, USAKA command judge advocate. "Are we trying to push alcohol so we're fueling the problem? The command is not interested in going back to prohibition. They think we can have alcohol, and it can be consumed responsibly."

KRS officials agreed.

"We're trying not to reduce the availability for consumers, but reduce the abuse," said Lloyd Jordan, Community Services deputy manager.

"We want to serve it to people for social purposes, but not to put people into a stupor," said Joe Marshall,

KRS deputy program manager for Community Services. "We don't want people to overdo it."

Alcohol sales on island, including both retail and bar sales, total $2 million annually, according to KRS officials. The profits go to the Recreation Fund.

Marshall said while he wants to make alcohol available to responsible consumers, he added that "if we didn't sell alcohol, we'd sell something else. People will spend their money on something."

Meanwhile, the venues for alcohol sales have changed over the past few months.

Most notably, the Yokwe Yuk Club bar reopens this weekend after closing down in February due to structural decay that had to be evaluated and repaired. (See related story, page 1.)

USAKA will form another committee to examine the specific issues surrounding underage drinking.

Yuk Club set to reopen Sunday

By KW Hillis

Gilligan's Bar opens Sunday evening for the first time since part of the Yokwe Yuk Club's ceiling fell in mid-February.

"This is to take the pressure off of the Oceanview and to let residents on the island who do not want to listen to loud music, have a drink, talk ... and listen to music on a CD," said Johann Bauml, KRS Food Services manager.

This is not a grand opening since the bar grill and the music system are not in place yet, he said, adding that he is looking for a grand opening sometime in early June complete with entertainment.

"After the grand opening, Gilligan's will have 'regular DJs, theme nights and specialties from the grill,' he said. Until then,

Fisherman gives crew credit due

In regards to your Friday, May 9, 2003 issue and the "Catch of the Week," I would like to provide some more information.

First a big thanks goes to Jim Thomson who let us use his poles and lures even though he was unable to go with us. Valan Anuntak was the one who picked the lures we used and was the only one who had gaffed a fish before. Julie Heater did a great job of taking in all the other lines and clearing the deck for us and for taking some beautiful photos. Mark Bailey was the captain and it was his boat driving skills that placed the lure in the right place for the marlin to take it.

Once the marlin was hooked, Mark was able to, even in rough seas, keep the boat in the best place to maintain steady pressure on the marlin and wear him out.

Finally a big thank you to Julie, Valan and Mark for letting me have the honor of handling the pole since I will be PCSing at the end of the month. They are a fun crew to fish with and I will miss them.

Letters prompt a

Last Friday's paper included the second of two letters from Scott Mock where he complained about the media and the war against Iraq. Both letters insulted Fox News by comparing it to CNN. Both reflected an extreme ideology while attacking perceived extremism.

Number one, Fox is not conservative, but I can understand the mistake. It is certainly more conservative than what we are used to with the history of decidedly liberal media, including CNN (once referred to by many as the Clinton News Network because it is so biased). Now we get a network which does fair and objective reporting (and becomes wildly popular because it is a welcome change to the uniformity of bad and un-objective reporting) that it seems conservative. Now every other network and cable news organization is scurrying to duplicate the Fox format and play catch-up, while simultaneously bashing them (of course, the greatest form of flattery is imitation). What a concept! Present both sides and let the viewers think for themselves (we report, you decide). Yeah, I guess Alan Colmes is conservative. Right!

Number two, in Scott's first letter (March 11) he said that the news from "George's War" would "consist of hand-fed scraps tossed to would-be reporters kept far behind the lines-and far from the truth." Guess that means that top-name correspondents from every major news organization could never have reported live via video-phone from the front lines, right? Not so much filtered pabulum from the press after all.

Obviously, we are all free to hold our opinions, but when those views are so extreme, it only lends to the notion that those who disagree are, of course, extreme.

There's beauty behind the burqa

By Pvt. 2 Terri Rorke
Army News Service

KANDAHAR AIR FIELD, Afghanistan — Braided hair, black eye liner, jingling bracelets and henna-clad fingers of Afghan women are not seen by many soldiers, simply because of the Muslim culture — women are always hiding under the burqa.

Soldiers routinely conduct village searches, which entail searching residents. The soldiers normally ask to have all women and children go to one room while the area is being searched. Because of past incidents where women hid weapons under their burqas, female Army searchers are more and more commonly being added to the passenger list for ground assault convoys on operations.

When I was tasked to go on a mission recently, as a journalist, I thought my primary job would be to take pictures and set up interviews. On the last couple of operations, though, I was needed to help out with searching females.

"Peace. I am a woman. I have to search you," I said in Pashto as I entered the dark rooms taking off my helmet and sun glasses to show the scared and innocent I was a female.

The 2- to 3-year olds usually started crying and they would latch on to their mother's beaded burqas. Despite the language barrier, I would ask them through gestures to stand up and spread their arms. Some looked directly in my eyes as I searched them, while others tried to hide underneath their robes. Some were shy and giggled as I patted down on their shoulders. They would pull out metal containers with beads from their dresses sequined with colors of blue, red, purple, pink and neon variations.

Of course I had my camera with me. I wanted to take pictures, but I didn't want to upset any of them. They were beautiful, yet so hidden. It is something I don't understand as an American and as someone who doesn't follow the Muslim lifestyle in the Middle East and central Asia.

Although I didn't totally understand what they were saying, I knew they were trying to tell me, "See, I wasn't hiding anything."

A couple of times I met women who looked just like Russians. I asked through gestures if I could take their picture. "No, no," they would reply in Pashto.

I wished I was a fly on the wall that could just snap away and I would then be able to show the world their beauty. But all I could do was say thanks for cooperating and I would leave them in their dark huts where their beauty remains to be seen strictly by their families, and maybe a female military journalist from time to time.

Circus daze

The Magic Circus of Samoa came to Ebeye performing over the past two weeks, with a special Kwajalein performance Monday night.

Kwajalein residents pitched in during a Jine Tip Tip Club fundraiser at the show held at Emon Beach. Circus ringmaster Tupe'i Bruno Loyale offered to give a ticket to a child on Ebeye for every dollar raised and the community responded, dropping a total of $653 in the bucket.

The island-hopping show, now more than 14 years old, featured aerial acts, a bicyclist stunt man, a juggler, magicians and clowns, along with a carnival of rides. The group travels about 15 months throughout the Pacific before breaking on Samoa.

Marcello, of Paraguay, performs a bicycle stunt for Kwaj folks to admire, but not try to duplicate.

Rusty wins family event

By KW Hillis

Associate Editor

Teams, some consisting of kids in flip-flops, tiny babies with helmets and parents pushing strollers and individual entrants, mostly teenagers, competed in the 21st annual Rusty Family Triathlon Monday afternoon.

Rusty Baker took the individual first place with a time of 55:42. Just six seconds later, Danny Razook crossed the finish line after the 500-yard swim, 10-mile bike ride and 2-mile run. Max Cohen took third place 23 seconds later. Team "Chocolate Milk," made up of swimmer Carlos Notarianni, biker Trevor Wallner and runner Brendan Kenney won with a total time of 58:12.

"The first five individual finishers are all high school boys," said Bob Sholar, Kwajalein Running Club president. "The boys that placed first through fifth this year, placed second through sixth last year"

Last year, Anthony Desmarais, now graduated, placed first but would have had to work hard to beat the first three finishers this year who bested his winning time of 57:51, Sholar said. Both Cohen and Chris Berlind are veterans of the individual portion of the Rusty Family with Cohen entering four times before and Berlind five times.

Babies in strollers like Kayla Hepler, listed as part of a family team, snoozed as her father, Doug, pushed her around the 2-mile run.

Seven-year-olds Nick Sieze and Evan Brower were the youngest individual entries and Sieze is a veteran of the event, improving his last year's time by 31 minutes, Sholar said.

The turnout was one of the largest, he said, with 27 individuals and 35 teams.

As to what were the fastest times ever, there are no records to look back at.

"The founders of this made it friendly, they didn't keep official records," Sholar said.

First time entry 6-year-old Molly Premo, as part of "The Premos," had so much fun running and riding in a stroller she has bigger plans for next year's triathlon.

"I want to do all of it," she said.

Incident numbers steady, despite club closing ...

In the same time period, the numbers of alcohol-related incidents have remained steady as compared with the first quarter in 2002.

Incidents range from a patron passed out in a public place from drinking too much to public urination to driving Under the influence of alcohol to possession of an open container of alcohol anywhere outside authorized areas to unauthorized transfer of an alcoholic beverage to unauthorized re-sale of an alcoholic beverage to a fist fight where police note the individuals are inebriated.

Police recorded 29 alcohol-related incidents since January, according to Jayne Ball, KPD administrative actions clerk. Ball said that not all of those incidents necessarily occurred in the month listed, because of the processing time for cases. For example, if a case occurred at the end of one month, it might not show up on records until early the next month.

That said, of the 29 incidents, nine occurred or were processed in January. The Yokwe Yuk Club closed in February and that month shows only four incidents. March shows a marked drop-off with only one incident.

"When they closed the club, we had a drastic reduction in a lot of things, and just sheer numbers of people we were dealing with," said KPD Chief Kevin Dykema.

But Dykema added those numbers have climbed again, and statistics bear that out. In fact, police recorded 15 incidents in April, which is a significant increase, but still not much more than the 2002 annual average of 9.75 incidents per month. And during the first quarter of 2002, police recorded 25 incidents with only two in January 2002.

Dykema attributes "events at the Oceanview" and "people getting accustomed to it" for the increase.

"People are adaptable and I'm sure they would find other places and locations [to drink]," he said. "I'm not an advocate of keeping the club closed to keep the numbers down."

"You should have a place to socialize, and alcohol doesn't have to be a part of it, but we're all adults and know what we should and shouldn't do."

But a number of the incidents are irrespective of the venues in that they involve the illegal distribution of alcohol purchased legally at Ten-Ten and consumed at a beach location or a private home. In short, K-Badge holders over 21 buy alcohol for individuals or groups not authorized to buy alcohol on base. They then get into trouble with police long after the supplier has gone somewhere else. Authorities hope, through public awareness, to crack down on the problem.

"This situation constitutes black marketing," said Olen Lawson, USAKA

Alcohol counseling is available ...

deputy commander. "which does not necessarily mean selling to anyone."

Purchasing alcohol, giving it to an unauthorized individual, then walking away is an unauthorized transfer of goods and material. Appropriate disciplinary action can be taken against the buyer, to include up to a permanent bar from the island, Lawson said.

One cost of alcohol on island comes in the form of punishments meted out for misbehavior. And while police have noted 29 incidents this quarter, the command has processed 109 administrative actions based on cases from the recent past. Of those 109 cases, 79 of them, or 72 percent, involved alcohol in some way.

Administrative actions could include anything from community service to mandated counseling to a suspended, temporary or permanent bar from the island.

"In some cases, we have long-time workers here," Duncan said. "They have a lot invested in us. We have a lot invested in them in training and experience. It eventually ends in a [administrative] bar where they lose their jobs and the company loses an employee. It's no good on either side."

To address these issues, the team began with a plan to train bar employees on when to cut off those who have had too much to drink.

"And we need the community's help here, so that they don't get their friend a drink after they've been cut off," Jordan said.

In tandem with that training, Ten-Ten employees will receive greater training on making ID checks. Complicating matters, not only must employees check that the buyer is over 21, but also that the buyer is authorized to buy alcohol at Ten-Ten. In fact, the command issues 22 different ID cards, some appearing similar, with various restrictions on each. But only four cards authorize the holder to purchase alcohol at Ten-Ten.

The group also hopes to put much of the focus on supervisors, asking them to refer employees with problems to the Employee Assistance Program.

Marion Ruffing, psychologist at the hospital and certified EAP specialist, said the EAP and Alcoholics Anonymous programs are both available for anyone who wants help.

"We can do treatment right here," she said. "We can detox in the hospital, but we don't usually have to because most are functioning and maintaining alcoholics."

She said the programs benefit both American and Marshallese patients, adding for Marshallese, "I counsel them and conduct an EAP for them too," Ruffing said. "I gear their meetings more towards community, family and God."

Ruffing added she treats patients confidentially so anyone who comes to her on their own is not reported to their boss, or anyone else.

"Of course, the ones that come recommended, their supervisors already know about it," she said.

The Rev. Rick Funk, protestant chaplain, is also available for short-term, confidential counseling.

"Someone may come to counseling saying, 'I might have a problem,' or 'Do I have a problem?' or 'I know I have a problem, and this is how it is affecting my relationships,'" Funk said. "Everything said to me is confidential completely. No one can access the information, neither the commander nor the KRS president, as long as there isn't a life in danger."

Bar to open in stages ...

Gilligan's will open in stages.

The first stage is a "conversation bar with a relaxed and quieter bar atmosphere," he said. Patrons will be able to order drinks and eat snacks. Hardier food such as pizza, burgers and chicken is available from the Three Palms Snack Bar.

"I'm going to put a menu over there and we'll deliver to the club," said

Robert Champion, Three Palms Snack Bar manager. Delivery times will be until the snack bar closes at 9 p.m.

Starting Sunday, Gilligan's will be open four days a week. On Fridays and Mondays, the bar will open 7-11 p.m. and on Saturdays and Sundays, the hours are 7 p.m. - 2 a.m.

Until the grand re-opening, the Oceanview will continue to have DJs on the weekends, he said.

NOTICE OF availability. USAKA Draft Document of Environmental Protection for Routine Maintenance Dredging and Filling. The U.S. Army Kwajalein Atoll (USAKA) Environmental Standards require that the operating parameters of USAKA activities, with the potential to affect the public health and environment, must be defined in a Document of Environmental Protection (DEP). The Standards further provide that regulatory agencies and the public be allowed to review and comment on the draft DEP. This DEP will govern dredging and filling activities required for routine maintenance of shorelines, harbors, channels, piers, boat ramps, and water intakes and outfalls. The DEP applies only to previously dredged or filled areas. The DEP specifies requirements, limitations, and monitoring, reporting, notification and records keeping procedures. The public is invited to review and comment on this draft DEP. This draft DEP and the Environmental Standards are available for review at the Grace Sherwood Library, the Roi-Namur Library and the Alele Museum and Library. Water was turned into books on Monday when $6,100 raised by the, now defunct, Kwajalein Atoll Relief for Ebeye organization was turned into thousands of books for Ebeye elementary schoolchildren thanks to the Yokwe Yuk Women's Club.

"We went to every single elementary school and set up a book fair there," said Melissa Vessar, YYWC Education Assistance Committee chair. "This may have been their first book that wasn't a schoolbook."

KARE, an organization devoted to helping Ebeye residents gain more access to fresh water, gave the money to the YYWC when KARE disbanded last fall so it is appropriate that the money was used on Ebeye, she said.

YYWC volunteers including Vassar and YYWC Book Fair chair Debbie Mawhar accompanied by some Marshall Islands Club and National Honor Society students provided two students and one adult at each of the six elementary schools where they spread age-appropriate books across tables or the floor so the children could choose, she said.

The YYWC charged a quarter for each book with the club making up the rest of the cost in hopes that the children would take care of the books.

"I expected more not to have a quarter so I had a pocket full of quarters," she said. "If they didn't, I slipped them a quarter; but some had a dollar and could get four books, and they knew it."

Some children were so shy that the volunteers had to open the books for them.

"It was interesting to me that when I would go to a student and open the book and read a few lines they would invariably pick that book," she said, adding that any leftover books were given to the school's principal for student use.

"I hope it is done again, it went so smoothly," she added.
